

Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite Expands Fernandina Beach Family Law Resources for Local Families

October 26, 2026

JACKSONVILLE, FL - October 26, 2026 -

Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite has broadened its efforts to make family law information more accessible to individuals and families in Fernandina Beach and throughout Nassau County. The firm is now offering expanded educational resources designed to help residents better understand Florida family law procedures before making important decisions about their families.

The resources address common questions that arise during divorce, the development of parenting plans and timesharing arrangements, child support obligations, modifications of existing court orders, and adoption. Rather than focusing on individual cases, the materials aim to explain how Florida family law principles generally apply, giving families a clearer starting point when they face significant legal decisions.

According to the firm, many people encounter the family court system during periods of considerable personal change, often without a clear understanding of the procedures involved or the considerations that may affect their situation. Access to reliable, straightforward information can help individuals identify relevant factors and prepare informed questions before meeting with an attorney.

"Families going through transitions such as divorce or a change in parenting responsibilities often tell us they wish they had understood the process sooner," said Jay Henderlite, managing partner at Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite. "The goal of these resources is to give people in Nassau County a reliable foundation, so they can approach their decisions with greater confidence and ask the right questions when it matters most."

The educational materials cover topics that frequently affect local families, including how Florida courts approach timesharing and parenting responsibilities, the factors considered in child support determinations, and the circumstances under which existing court orders may be modified. The resources also address the adoption process, which involves distinct legal steps and considerations for prospective parents and relative caregivers.

Henderlite noted that understanding how general legal principles apply to specific circumstances is often the most challenging part for families. "Every family is different, and the law applies to each situation in its own way," he said. "When financial arrangements, parenting responsibilities, or changing family needs are involved, understanding the framework helps people see how their circumstances fit within it. A well-informed Fernandina Beach family law attorney conversation begins with a well-informed client."

The firm has also continued its public education work through its podcast, When Split Happens, which discusses topics related to family law and the experiences individuals encounter during family transitions. The program complements the written resources by offering accessible discussions of common concerns and considerations.

Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite has indicated that it intends to continue developing and updating these materials as Florida family law evolves and as community needs change. The firm views ongoing public education as an extension of its work serving families across Northeast Florida.

Sasso Guerrero & Henderlite is a law firm based in Jacksonville, Florida, serving clients in family law and criminal law. The firm is the only practice in Northeast Florida with three Board Certified Marital and Family Law experts serving as its managing partners. Its family law practice includes divorce, child custody, child support, parenting plans, modifications, adoption, and related matters throughout the region, including Nassau County and Fernandina Beach.
