

Disaster Plus Expands Focus on Mold Removal as Property Owners Prioritize Indoor Air Quality

October 26, 2026

MT PLEASANT, SC - October 26, 2026 -
Disaster Plus, a building restoration company serving the greater Charleston area since 1986, has expanded its focus on mold remediation services in response to growing attention among property owners toward healthier indoor environments. The shift reflects a broader regional trend in which homeowners and businesses are placing greater emphasis on identifying and addressing moisture-related issues before they develop into larger structural and health concerns.

The humid coastal climate of South Carolina creates conditions in which mold can develop quickly in both residential and commercial properties. Common contributors include air conditioner leaks, high indoor humidity, storm damage, and undetected plumbing problems. In recent months, demand for assessment and remediation services has reflected increased awareness of how mold affects indoor air quality and property value.

Disaster Plus in Charleston, SC employs professionally trained and IICRC certified technicians who conduct comprehensive assessments of affected areas and develop detailed plans for remediation and property restoration. The process includes identifying the underlying source of moisture, containing the affected area, removing contaminated materials, and restoring the property to its prior condition. The company addresses both residential properties, where leaks and moisture buildup are frequent concerns, and commercial properties, where the goal includes minimizing downtime so operations can resume with limited interruption.

"Property owners across the region are recognizing that mold is not simply a cosmetic issue but one tied directly to the health of an indoor environment," said Keating Norris, a spokesperson for Disaster Plus. "The expanded focus reflects what the team has observed on the ground, with more homeowners and business operators seeking early assessments rather than waiting for a problem to escalate."

The company notes that timely intervention remains central to effective recovery. Mold can spread within a short window once moisture is present, and delays often increase both the scope of remediation and the associated restoration work. By prioritizing assessment and containment, the team aims to limit the extent of damage and support a more straightforward restoration process.

"The emphasis on mold removal in SC comes at a time when indoor air quality has become a shared priority for families and businesses alike," Norris added. "The approach combines certified expertise with a methodical plan tailored to each property and its specific moisture conditions."

In addition to remediation, Disaster Plus assists property owners with the documentation required for insurance claims, recording the extent of the damage and providing supporting information. The company works with insurance providers as part of its broader service offering.

Disaster Plus is a locally owned and operated building restoration company based in Mount Pleasant, South Carolina, with more than 37 years of experience serving the greater Charleston area. The company provides water damage restoration, mold remediation, fire and smoke damage restoration, odor abatement, biohazard cleanup, and sewage removal for both residential and commercial properties.
