June 30, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Assisting Hands, a business in Houston, TX, has announced that they offer in home care to elderly or disabled patients. The company explains that they provide a solution to the problem where finding an excellent elderly care or assisted living facility is incredibly difficult. People worry about trusting one of these facilities with the overall care of their elderly relatives, particularly since there have been so many horror stories of ill treatment in these facilities. Full details about the work that Assisting Hands do can be found on their website at Assistinghandshouston.com.

Terri Robbins, Houston Area Representative and co-founder of Assisting Hands Houston, says: "I provided elderly care for my mother while battling breast cancer myself. I knew that others were in a similar situation as me, and I aimed to find a way to make their life as easy as possible."

The company offers a service with a difference. They serve all of Houston, offering personalized care. This includes elderly companionship, meal preparation, medication reminders, shopping, errands, light housework, laundry, bathing, and dressing. All caretakers are fully trained to provide personalized care.

Those who have used the service have been incredibly positive about their experiences, as can be seen on the company's Facebook page. "Thank you for all you do for the elderly in Houston and beyond," says one happy customer.

Marisol Reyes, co-founder of Assisting Hands Houston, says: "I also experienced the dilemma of figuring out how to help my mother fulfill her wish to live at home after being diagnosed with cancer. I sought professional in home caregivers that I could trust to make my mother's wishes possible."

Glenn Brass, co-founder of Assisting Hands North Houston, says: "My role has always been to lead caregiving, while at the same time serving in several management positions in healthcare related companies. I did this after serving in the U.S. Air Force for 21 years."

Besides offering excellent, high quality, personalized care, the company also aims to raise awareness about the industry as a whole. This is why they encourage everyone to follow their Twitter page, where they regularly share advice, information and guidance relevant to those requiring care provisions.
