

egli jona ag Highlights Garden Construction and Terraces as Spring Planning Season Opens

October 30, 2026

RAPPERSWIL-JONA, CH - October 30, 2026 -
With warmer months approaching, egli jona ag is drawing attention to the planning phase that precedes garden construction and terraces projects across the Lake Zurich region. The Rapperswil-Jona company is reporting increased early-season interest from property owners who are preparing outdoor spaces ahead of summer, a period when design and build schedules fill quickly.

Based at Buechstrasse 38 in Rapperswil-Jona on Lake Zurich, the firm employs around 120 specialists who design and build gardens, terraces, swimming ponds, natural pools and conventional pools for both residential developments and public spaces. The team also maintains gardens year-round, meaning that projects started in spring can be supported through every season that follows.

For property owners in the region, the early-season timing carries practical weight. Terrace construction and garden layouts often involve groundwork, material selection and planting decisions that benefit from lead time. Beginning the planning conversation before the peak season allows for considered choices on surfaces, walls, paths and seating areas rather than rushed decisions once construction demand rises.

The company combines traditional craftsmanship with modern methods, a balance reflected in its range of outdoor work. Alongside standard garden and terrace builds, egli jona ag pools projects include natural pools with chemical-free water treatment, conventional swimming pools, infinity and overflow designs, and swimming ponds that use biological cleaning systems. Each type suits different site conditions and aesthetic preferences, which is why planning usually begins with an assessment of the property itself.

To help property owners visualise options, egli jona ag operates a show garden with a pool exhibition in Aathal near Wetzikon. The exhibition displays several pool types along with materials, planting arrangements and plant containers, giving visitors a physical reference point during the planning stage rather than relying on drawings alone.

The firm also undertakes large-scale outdoor projects for architectural offices and general contractors, applying the same planning discipline to complex developments as it does to private gardens. This dual focus on residential and public work has shaped the company's approach to scheduling, where early engagement supports smoother execution across projects of varying size.

Beyond construction, the company contributes to the future of the trade by training landscape gardener apprentices, helping to sustain craft skills within the regional industry. This commitment to training complements the year-round maintenance services that keep completed gardens and installations in condition over time.

As the planning season advances, egli jona ag continues to position design consultation as the foundation of durable outdoor spaces, encouraging property owners to treat terraces, gardens and water features as connected elements of a single environment rather than separate additions.
