Crown Plumbing & Restoration Expands Trenchless Sewer Pipe Repair Services

October 29, 2026

SAN ANTONIO, TX - October 29, 2026 -

Crown Plumbing & Water Damage Restoration, a family-owned plumbing and restoration company serving San Antonio since 2006, has expanded its trenchless pipe repair services to additional neighborhoods across the region. The expansion brings low-dig and no-dig sewer solutions to a wider segment of Bexar County homeowners who have historically faced extensive excavation when addressing underground pipe failures.

Trenchless methods allow technicians to rehabilitate or replace damaged underground lines through small access points rather than lengthy open trenches. The approach reduces disruption to yards, driveways, and landscaping while shortening the timeline for many sewer line repair projects. By broadening the geographic footprint of these services, Crown aims to make the technology available to residents in areas where it was previously limited.

The company reports that demand for trenchless solutions has grown as more homeowners seek alternatives to traditional dig-and-replace work. Older neighborhoods with aging infrastructure often contain clay or cast-iron lines that are prone to cracking, root intrusion, and collapse. Trenchless repair offers a way to restore those systems with minimal surface impact.

Jeremy Newman, owner of Crown Plumbing & Water Damage Restoration, said the expansion reflects changes in both technology and customer expectations. "Homeowners want their pipe problems solved without tearing apart their property, and trenchless methods make that possible in more situations than ever before," Newman said. "Extending these services into additional neighborhoods means more families can access modern repair options close to home."

Newman noted that the company's structure allows it to handle related issues under one roof. When a failed line leads to backups or water intrusion, Crown can address both the plumbing and any resulting damage without coordinating separate contractors. In older homes, that work occasionally involves asbestos removal when building materials disturbed during a repair are found to contain the substance, a service the company performs under its abatement license.

"The goal is to meet a household's needs through a single, accountable team," Newman said. "Whether the project is a straightforward repair or a larger restoration, a coordinated process tends to produce a smoother outcome for the homeowner."

The company's plumbing division covers a broad range of residential needs beyond sewer work, including water heater replacement, drain cleaning, leak detection, and routine inspections. Crown pairs these plumbing services with in-house restoration capabilities such as water damage restoration, mold remediation, and fire damage cleanup.

Crown's trenchless expansion joins a broader industry shift toward less invasive infrastructure repair. Municipalities and private property owners across Texas have increasingly adopted similar techniques as a practical response to aging pipe networks. To learn more, visit crownrestoration.com.
