The Summit Expands Addiction Center Placement Services Across New York City Metro Area

November 02, 2026

NEW YORK, NY - November 02, 2026 -
The Summit has expanded its placement and referral services for inpatient addiction treatment, extending 24/7 support to individuals seeking care across all five boroughs of New York City and the greater metropolitan region, including Long Island and Westchester.

The Summit addiction center in New York City operates as a referral and placement resource that connects individuals with licensed inpatient treatment programs. Rather than functioning as a licensed treatment facility, the organization serves as a bridge between people in crisis and appropriate clinical care, offering free insurance verification and same-day admissions when beds are available for commercially insured callers.

The expanded services arrive as New York City continues to confront a substance use crisis driven in part by fentanyl and xylazine. The organization provides access to borough-level overdose data and statistics, information that informs how placement specialists match individuals with programs suited to their circumstances.

"The need for timely, informed placement has never been more pressing across the New York City region," said a spokesperson for The Summit. "The goal is to remove the delays and confusion that often stand between a person and the treatment they require, whether that involves medical detox, dual diagnosis care, or a structured residential program."

Through The Summit inpatient drug rehab referral network, the organization directs individuals toward programs offering 24/7 residential care, individual and group therapy, relapse prevention, and skill-building for long-term recovery. For those managing withdrawal from opioids, alcohol, benzodiazepines, or combinations such as fentanyl-xylazine, the network includes medical detox programs that provide clinically supervised stabilization before further treatment begins.

The organization also supports individuals with co-occurring mental health conditions through dual diagnosis placement, addressing disorders such as depression, anxiety, PTSD, and bipolar disorder alongside substance use. Substance-specific referral options cover alcohol, heroin, fentanyl, cocaine, benzodiazepines, prescription opioids, methamphetamine, and xylazine.

Insurance verification remains a central component of the service. The organization reviews coverage options at no cost, helping individuals understand out-of-pocket responsibilities and identify in-network facilities. Specialists also explain New York State's no-preauthorization rule for inpatient substance use disorder treatment, a provision that can accelerate admissions.

"Families often reach out at the most difficult moment, and clarity matters," the spokesperson for The Summit said. "Explaining coverage, confirming availability, and coordinating admission in a confidential manner allows people to focus on recovery rather than logistics."

All interactions are HIPAA-protected to preserve privacy. The organization also shares information on immediate crisis resources, including the 988 Suicide and Crisis Lifeline and NYC Well, for individuals who require urgent support.

The Summit is a referral and placement resource serving individuals seeking inpatient addiction treatment throughout New York City and the surrounding metropolitan area. The organization provides round-the-clock placement support, free insurance verification, and guidance toward licensed programs offering detox, residential rehabilitation, and dual diagnosis care.
