J. Moreland Releases Comprehensive Legal Rights Guide

November 03, 2026

FRANKLIN, TN - November 03, 2026 -
Tennessee family law attorney J. Moreland has announced the public release of an educational initiative titled "Navigating Legal Protections: A Practical Guide to Tennessee Domestic Violence Law and Family Court Procedures." Published on November 2, 2026, the resource is designed to clarify civil protective remedies, domestic relations statutes, and court operations for individuals, advocates, and support organizations across Davidson County and surrounding Middle Tennessee jurisdictions.

The release follows data reported by the Tennessee Bureau of Investigation (TBI) and regional legal assistance programs indicating a sustained volume of domestic-related calls and protective petition filings across the 20th Judicial District. Navigating the legal aftermath of intimate partner abuse presents distinct logistical, procedural, and emotional hurdles. While self-represented litigants may file petitions directly through court clerks, understanding procedural requirements, filing standards, and available statutory remedies remains a recurring obstacle for many seeking civil relief.

Presented as a free, downloadable PDF handbook and an accompanying multi-part digital reference series, the guide outlines key statutory frameworks under the Tennessee Code Annotated (Title 36, Chapter 3, Part 6). It provides neutral procedural explanations of how to petition for an ex parte Order of Protection, how statutory emergency relief functions, and what to expect during formal evidentiary hearings before Davidson County General Sessions and Circuit Court judges.

"When individuals evaluate whether to seek protective orders or initiate domestic legal actions, procedural clarity helps them make informed choices about their personal safety and legal options," stated J. Moreland. "Our objective with this resource is to explain court rules, evidentiary standards, and available statutory protections in straightforward language, while pointing individuals toward the network of legal aid and community resources available in our district."

The material addresses broader family law considerations that often intersect with protective petitions, including pendente lite child custody determinations, temporary child support calculations, exclusive use of the marital residence, and parenting plan modifications. The guide also details evidence collection practices?such as preserving electronic communications, maintaining incident chronologies, and securing certified law enforcement reports?while emphasizing that courts evaluate admissible evidence on a case-by-case basis and that outcomes cannot be guaranteed.

In addition to statutory overviews, the publication outlines regional victim services and shelter networks. It includes direct directory entries for community partners such as the Mary Parrish Center, the YWCA Nashville & Middle Tennessee Weaver Domestic Violence Center, the Nashville Family Safety Center, and Legal Aid Society of Middle Tennessee and the Cumberlands. This collaborative framing bridges the gap between independent community care programs and formal courthouse procedures.

Attorney J. Moreland has focused on domestic relations and civil advocacy in Middle Tennessee courts for over fifteen years. Her background includes collaborating with the Nashville Bar Association?s pro bono initiatives, coordinating referral workflows with regional family safety programs, and conducting community legal education seminars on civil restraining orders. While retained counsel can advocate on a client's behalf, manage discovery, and present evidentiary arguments, the guide explicitly notes that legal representation cannot eliminate all litigation risks, mandate specific judge assignments, or guarantee particular courtroom outcomes.
