VFM Celebrates 500th Fence Installation and Launches New Aluminum Fencing Blog Series

October 30, 2026

SAN DIEGO, CA - October 30, 2026 -
VFM - Aluminum and Vinyl Fences Gates Rails and Patio Covers has announced two company developments: completion of its 500th aluminum fence installation and the launch of a new blog series focused on aluminum fencing. The announcements highlight the company's installation work and its effort to give residential and commercial property owners practical information as they evaluate fencing options.

The new series, titled "Aluminum Fencing: A Modern Solution for Modern Homes," will cover topics related to aluminum fence materials, design choices, installation, and care. Planned subjects include the durability and sustainability considerations associated with aluminum, the range of styles available, and practices involved in planning and installing a fence. The articles are intended to help readers understand the factors that can influence a fencing project, from selecting a suitable design to considering how the finished installation will function within an outdoor space.

Aluminum fencing is used in a range of residential and commercial settings. Its resistance to rust is one reason property owners may consider it for outdoor applications, while its adaptable appearance can complement different architectural styles. Design, layout, site conditions, and intended use all affect which fencing option is appropriate for a particular property. VFM's blog series will address these considerations and provide readers with information to support more informed project planning.

The articles will also discuss installation best practices and maintenance considerations. Topics may include evaluating the area where a fence will be installed, choosing a style that suits the property's layout, and understanding the steps involved in completing the work. By bringing these subjects together in one resource, VFM aims to answer common questions that arise when homeowners and businesses compare fencing materials or prepare for an installation.

The second announcement marks the completion of VFM's 500th aluminum fence installation. The milestone represents a significant point in the company's project history and reflects the volume of aluminum fencing work completed for its customers. Each installation involves decisions about the property's layout, the purpose of the fence, and the design preferences of the customer. These factors can vary between projects, making it important to consider the requirements of each site rather than approach every installation in the same way.

For property owners researching an aluminum fence company in San Diego, CA, the milestone provides context about VFM's completed installation work. The company offers aluminum and vinyl fencing, gates, rails, and patio covers. Its services address a range of outdoor property needs, including defining boundaries, adding a perimeter feature, and coordinating fencing elements with the surrounding space. Customers can discuss their project requirements with the company to determine which options may be suitable for their property.

The blog series is intended to complement that project experience with accessible information. Readers will be able to use the articles as a starting point when considering material characteristics, comparing design possibilities, and preparing questions for a fencing contractor. The content will also address practical aspects of the installation process, helping readers understand why site conditions and project goals should be considered before work begins.

Together, the blog launch and 500th installation mark two developments in VFM's ongoing operations: sharing information about aluminum fencing and continuing to complete projects for property owners in the San Diego area. Those interested in learning more about aluminum fencing or discussing an upcoming project can contact VFM directly. Property owners looking for an aluminum fence company in San Diego, CA can speak with the team about available fencing, gate, rail, and patio cover options, as well as the considerations involved in planning an installation.
