Coomes Landscape Services Highlights the Importance of Thoughtful Landscape Planning

October 30, 2026

GRAND LEDGE, MI - October 30, 2026 -
Coomes Landscape Services is highlighting the importance of thoughtful landscape planning as residential and commercial property owners look for ways to create functional, attractive outdoor environments. The family-owned landscaping company has served the Greater Lansing area since 1982, providing landscape design, hardscaping, and outdoor living solutions tailored to different property needs.

Outdoor spaces can serve many purposes, from providing a quiet place to relax to creating an inviting setting for gatherings. Achieving a cohesive result often requires more than selecting plants or installing a patio. Property owners must consider how different features work together, how people move through the space, and how the design accommodates existing conditions. A well-planned landscape can connect these elements while making better use of available space.

Coomes Landscape Services offers landscape design and installation services that help property owners plan and develop outdoor environments. For those considering landscape design in Lansing, MI, the planning process provides an opportunity to evaluate the property's layout, intended uses, and long-term goals before construction begins. Establishing these priorities early can guide decisions about patios, walkways, retaining walls, and other features.

Hardscaping is an important component of many outdoor projects. Paver patios provide designated areas for seating and entertaining, while walkways establish routes between different parts of a property. Retaining walls can help manage changes in elevation and create more usable areas on uneven terrain. Integrating these features into an overall plan can improve both the appearance and functionality of an outdoor environment.

Material selection also influences the success of a landscape project. Different materials offer varying appearances, textures, and maintenance considerations. Pavers can create durable outdoor surfaces that complement a property's architectural style. Coomes Landscape Services is an authorized Unilock contractor, offering customers access to hardscape products designed for outdoor applications. Choosing materials that suit the intended use of a space helps property owners balance appearance and practicality.

Outdoor living spaces are another consideration for property owners seeking to make better use of their yards. Features such as outdoor kitchens, grilling areas, and fire pits create designated places for cooking, entertaining, and relaxing. Water features provide additional opportunities to introduce visual interest. The right combination depends on the property's layout, available space, and the activities the owner wants to accommodate.

Planning these features together can help prevent an outdoor area from feeling disconnected or overcrowded. A patio intended for entertaining, for example, needs sufficient room for seating and movement, while an outdoor kitchen requires thoughtful placement. Walkways can connect these spaces and establish a natural flow throughout the property. Considering these relationships during the design stage can make the finished landscape more practical for everyday use.

Changes in elevation may also influence how a property can be developed. Sloped areas can present challenges when planning patios, walkways, and gathering spaces. Evaluating these conditions before installation helps identify suitable solutions and opportunities to create more functional outdoor areas. Incorporating retaining walls and other hardscape elements into the broader plan can help individual features work together effectively.

Coomes Landscape Services serves residential and commercial customers with different landscaping requirements. Residential projects may focus on outdoor recreation, entertaining, and improving the relationship between a home and its yard. Commercial properties may need outdoor areas that accommodate visitors and employees while maintaining a consistent appearance. In both settings, planning around the intended use of the space helps property owners determine which improvements best fit their needs.

Maintenance is another factor worth considering before a project begins. Upkeep requirements vary depending on the selected materials, installed features, and overall design. Property owners who consider maintenance expectations early can make choices that align with their available time and resources. Discussing project goals and material options before construction also helps establish realistic expectations for the finished space.

Founded in 1982, Coomes Landscape Services brings decades of experience to landscaping and outdoor construction projects throughout the Greater Lansing area. The family-owned business offers free estimates and provides warranties on materials and workmanship. Its services include landscape design, hardscape installation, retaining walls, patios, and outdoor living features, allowing property owners to explore improvements based on their property's characteristics and individual goals.

As property owners continue to invest in their outdoor environments, thoughtful planning remains essential to creating spaces that combine functionality with visual appeal. Coomes Landscape Services encourages customers to consider how layout, materials, and individual features can work together before beginning construction. Through its landscape design in Lansing, MI, and surrounding communities, the company continues to support residential and commercial customers seeking practical, well-planned outdoor improvements.
