

Lovett Inc. Highlights Vacuum Truck Services for Complex Cleanup and Infrastructure Projects

November 04, 2026

PORTLAND, OR - November 04, 2026 -
Lovett Inc., a full-service plumbing, excavation, and underground infrastructure company serving the Pacific Northwest, is drawing attention to its vacuum truck services as demand grows among commercial, industrial, and municipal clients facing complex cleanup, excavation, and infrastructure challenges.

Vacuum trucks, often referred to as vac trucks, allow crews to excavate soil, extract debris, and remove waste using pressurized water and industrial-strength suction. The approach supports projects where precision and site protection matter, including work near existing utilities, confined spaces, and sensitive environments where traditional digging methods carry greater risk.

Lovett Inc. vacuum truck services encompass hydro excavation, stormwater maintenance, debris extraction, waste removal, and confined space support. These capabilities allow the company to address a range of needs for property managers, contractors, and public agencies across the region. Hydro excavation, in particular, offers a non-destructive method of removing soil, reducing the likelihood of damage to buried lines

The company reports that interest in vacuum truck applications has increased as clients seek methods that limit disruption to surrounding infrastructure. Stormwater maintenance and debris extraction remain areas of steady demand, especially as aging systems require inspection and cleaning to maintain proper function.

"Vacuum truck work has become central to how complex sites are managed today," said Dale Lovett, President of Lovett Inc. "Crews can reach areas that are difficult to access and handle material removal without the disruption that comes with conventional excavation. That matters for clients who need to protect existing utilities and keep sites operational."

Lovett noted that the equipment serves a wide spectrum of project types. "The same trucks used for stormwater maintenance one day may support a confined space cleanup the next," he said. "The flexibility allows the company to respond to a variety of situations that municipal and industrial clients encounter throughout the year."

The vacuum truck fleet complements the broader scope of work the company performs, including excavation and civil site services, directional drilling, drain cleaning, and sewer rehabilitation. Many projects draw on several of these capabilities at once, with vacuum trucks supporting excavation efforts and site cleanup across multifamily, commercial, industrial, and municipal properties.

Confined space support represents a specialized area of the service. Crews assist with material removal in locations that require careful handling and attention to safety protocols, a factor that often influences how industrial and municipal projects are planned.

Founded in 1997, Lovett Inc. in Portland, Oregon, is a commercial and residential plumbing, drain cleaning, excavation, and underground infrastructure company. The company serves multifamily, commercial, industrial, and municipal clients throughout the Pacific Northwest. Its core services include commercial plumbing, drain cleaning and sewer work, excavation and civil site services, directional drilling, vacuum truck services, and water damage restoration. Additional offerings include sewer camera inspection, backflow testing, hydro excavation, pipe bursting, stormwater services, EV charging installation, and snow and ice removal. The company maintains licensed plumbers and trained crews to support projects of varying scale and complexity across the region.
