Cestari Shares Practical Holiday Hosting Tips Using Wine Glass Markers

November 06, 2026

LITTLETON, MA - November 06, 2026 -
As the holiday entertaining season arrives, kitchen tool maker Cestari is pointing home hosts toward a simple solution for two common party challenges: keeping track of guests' drinks and organizing the leftovers that follow a large gathering. The company's wine glass markers, which write directly on glass and wipe away afterward, are available now alongside its reusable pantry labels.

Misplaced beverages are a familiar frustration at crowded holiday parties, where guests often set down a glass and lose track of which one belongs to them. With Cestari wine glass markers, each guest can add a name or a small symbol to a wine glass when they arrive. The writing stays put through the evening and comes off with a damp cloth once the party ends.

The same markers extend their usefulness into the days after a gathering. Hosts can write the date and contents directly onto storage containers before placing leftovers in the refrigerator, helping households keep track of what remains and when it was prepared. The markers also pair with Cestari reusable pantry labels, chalkboard-style labels that can be written on, erased, and repositioned for use in the kitchen, office, closet, and other spaces around the home.

To help hosts make the most of these tools, the company offered three short hosting tips. First, set out a few markers near the entry so guests can label their own glasses as they arrive, reducing confusion later in the evening. Second, keep a marker in the kitchen during cleanup to note the date and contents on each leftover container as it is filled. Third, place reusable labels on serving dishes or pantry bins ahead of the event to identify dishes and ingredients for guests and household members alike.

"Holiday hosting already involves enough moving parts, and small details like whose glass is whose can add unnecessary stress," said Susan MacDowell, a spokesperson for Cestari. "The idea behind these markers is to take a couple of those headaches off a host's plate, both during the party and in the days afterward when the refrigerator is full of leftovers."

MacDowell noted that the versatility of the markers is part of their appeal for busy households. "What makes them practical is that the same tool handles more than one job," she said. "A host can mark glasses in the evening and then use the identical markers to date the leftover containers the next morning. Paired with the reusable labels, it gives families a consistent way to stay organized through a hectic season."

The markers write on non-porous surfaces such as glass, metal, and ceramic, and the writing can be removed with a damp cloth. Both products are currently on sale.
