Cestari Shares Approach to At-Home New Year's Eve Gatherings Featuring Salt Shot Glasses

November 09, 2026

LITTLETON, MA - November 09, 2026 -
As households prepare to welcome the new year, many hosts are turning their attention to intimate celebrations at home rather than crowded venues. For those planning a quiet gathering with close friends and family, Cestari offers a selection of barware designed to bring a measure of distinction to the occasion.

Among the items drawing attention this season are Himalayan salt shot glasses, each carved from pure Himalayan pink salt. Their translucent appearance ranges from pale cream to deep red, depending on the natural minerals present in the salt. The glasses are available individually or as a set of two, giving hosts flexibility whether they are setting a small table for two or a larger group.

The appeal of these glasses extends beyond their appearance. A short pour rested in one of the glasses picks up a light salt edge, a quality that pairs naturally with tequila served alongside lime. The effect allows a host to present a familiar drink with a subtle variation that suits the festive mood of a New Year's Eve toast.

"A home gathering on New Year's Eve has a different rhythm than a night out, and the details tend to matter more," said Susan MacDowell, spokesperson for Cestari. "A salt glass gives a simple pour a little character, and it becomes part of the conversation at the table rather than just another cup."

For guests who prefer whiskey or other spirits, the Cestari stainless steel whiskey ball offers a way to keep a drink cold without the dilution that comes from melting ice. The extra-large ball, measuring over two inches in diameter, chills a drink and holds its temperature while preserving the intended flavor of the beverage. Made from food-safe stainless steel, it is reusable and designed with rounded edges that will not scratch glassware.

The combination of the two items reflects a wider interest in thoughtful, low-effort hosting as the holiday season closes. Rather than elaborate preparations, many hosts are focusing on a few well-chosen touches that allow them to spend the evening with their guests instead of in the kitchen.

"The goal for most people hosting at home is to enjoy the night as much as everyone else," MacDowell said. "A chilled glass and a drink that holds its flavor let the host step back and take part in the celebration."

Both the salt glasses and the whiskey ball are available now and are backed by a lifetime guarantee, consistent with the standard that applies across the company's range of kitchen tools.
