

Valet Trash Company Launches Newly Redesigned Website

June 27, 2016

June 27, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Surprise, Arizona based National Trash Valet, has launched its newly redesigned website. The company provides instructions for those wishing to begin their own valet trash business. RJ Watters, founder and instructor for the company, says, "We wanted people to be able to easily find information about valet trash services, what they need in order to excel in this business, and how to get started."

The company offers a comprehensive tutorial package that explains how people can begin a trash valet business. Watters states that the new design of the company's website makes it much easier for those interested to find information that will help them to make a decision about whether or not this business is right for them.

The website outlines the tutorial system, explaining the content of the 30 videos and lists free bonuses that come along with the training system. Watters states that ease of use is one of the main reasons that the site was redesigned, although it was not the only reason.

"We wanted people to feel comfortable on our site. The colors, the images, right down to how the content is listed, were all considered to ensure that the new site design would be eye-catching. Overall, getting the information out that we offer the best training for the trash valet industry was key."

Those who are interested can view the company's official website at <https://nationaltrashvalet.com>, where an outline of the training system can be found. The company offers insights into the success of this type of business, along with training services.

Watters created the valet trash training system from years of running his own valet trash business. He states that the program offers information that is hard to come by or expensive to have made from scratch, including downloadable service contracts that valet trash entrepreneurs can use when they set up their own business, pricing sheets, cold calling scripts, and lists of apartment communities and contact managers for those really serious about setting up a business.

Those who would like to learn more about the program can see it in its entirety on the National Trash Valet newly redesigned website.
