Belmont Plastic Surgery in Stafford has outlined an expanded emphasis on individualized patient consultations and modern treatment options available at its plastic surgery clinic serving the broader Northern Virginia region. The board-certified practice, which has provided cosmetic and reconstructive services for more than 15 years, is drawing attention to the role that tailored planning plays in both surgical and nonsurgical procedures.

The practice provides a broad spectrum of options that span facial, breast, and body procedures, along with injectable and skin care treatments. Surgical offerings include breast augmentation, breast lift, breast reduction, and multiple forms of breast reconstruction such as DIEP flap and TRAM flap techniques. Facial procedures range from brow lift, eyelid surgery, and facelift to rhinoplasty, chin augmentation, and ear pinning surgery. Body contouring options include liposuction, tummy tuck, thigh lift, Brazilian butt lift, and the combination of procedures commonly grouped as a mommy makeover.

Dr. Jules Feledy, lead surgeon at the practice, described the reasoning behind the patient-centered model. "Every procedure begins with a conversation about what a patient hopes to achieve and what is realistic for their individual circumstances," said Dr. Feledy. "Personalized planning allows the surgical team to recommend the approach that fits the person rather than applying a single standard to everyone."

Nonsurgical services at the clinic include Botox, Dysport, Juvederm injectable gel, Restylane, lip augmentation, thread lift procedures, laser treatments, and a range of skin care services. The practice notes that each service begins with a consultation intended to match the procedure to the patient's individual anatomy, goals, and recovery expectations.

Dr. Feledy also addressed the combination of surgical and nonsurgical options available in one location. "Having a wide range of treatments under one roof means that patients can discuss both minor refinements and more involved procedures during the same consultation," said Dr. Feledy. "That continuity helps patients make informed decisions about timing, recovery, and expected outcomes."

The practice emphasizes that reconstructive services, including breast reconstruction following cancer treatment, remain a significant part of its work alongside elective cosmetic procedures. DIEP flap and TRAM flap reconstruction methods use a patient's own abdominal tissue to restore breast appearance, offering alternatives to implant-based reconstruction.

Belmont Plastic Surgery - Stafford plastic surgery clinic continues to serve patients throughout Stafford and Northern Virginia, with services that address both functional and aesthetic concerns. The practice reports that patient education, realistic expectation setting, and board-certified surgical oversight remain central to its operations.
