Farence Fencing Prioritizes Past Customers for Post-Season Repairs

November 20, 2026

JACKSONVILLE, FL - November 20, 2026 -
As the Atlantic hurricane season nears its official Nov. 30 close, Northeast Florida homeowners still have fences to look over after a season that brought a hurricane's outer rain bands in early October and two nor'easters later that month. Farence Fencing, a family-owned fence contractor in Jacksonville, said past customers who find storm damage this fall move to the head of its repair schedule.

By the usual yardstick, 2026 was a mild year. NOAA forecast a below-normal season in its May outlook. As of Nov. 4, the Atlantic's accumulated cyclone energy, a figure that combines storm intensity and duration, stood at 19.7, roughly 83% below the long-term average, according to FOX10 News, which called it one of the quietest seasons in modern history.

The region still had its share of weather. Hurricane Isaias came ashore on the Florida Panhandle as a Category 2 storm the night of Oct. 9, and its outer bands brought a severe thunderstorm warning for Clay, Duval and St. Johns counties along with coastal and river flooding, News4JAX reported. Two nor'easters followed within two weeks of each other later in October, with gusts forecast at 35 to 45 mph east of Interstate 95, according to WLRN. Not every problem shows up as a fence on the ground. Owner Steven Farence said a fence flattened by a fallen tree is easy to spot, and he pointed to a slower failure that can follow the rainy season: a post that sinks.

The policy for past customers is a standing one. When a storm or a fallen tree takes out a fence for a household the company has worked for before, that household moves ahead of new repair requests so the yard can be closed back in. Farence likened the priority list to insurance for those households, since they move up the line if something happens.

Farence Fencing's workmanship warranty is separate and covers only installation defects on fences the company built, such as a post that moves or sinks because of the install, or a gate that sags or twists out of square. It runs 10 years on wood fencing and for life on vinyl and aluminum. The wood warranty does not cover warping or rot, which Farence describes as natural to the material.

Scheduling stays inside the family. The owner's mother, Zandra, answers the office line and typically books an estimate the same day a request comes in. The owner aims to be at the property within three days. A written estimate follows the same day as the visit, guaranteed within 24 hours. Farence's younger brother, Matt, runs the install crew.

Steven Farence, owner of Farence Fencing, described how a sinking post appears along the fence line. "After a hot summer and then the rainy season, all that water has compacted the dirt back down around the hole," he said. "If the concrete wasn't packed tight, the rain fills those air pockets and the post sinks. You look down the fence line and it's running straight across, and then you've got that one post that drops."

Homeowners can reach Farence Fencing at (904) 719-3715 or visit www.farencefencing.com to schedule an estimate. One homeowner's account of the crew's help with a fence that fell during a storm is available to read.

About Farence Fencing

Farence Fencing is a family-owned fence contractor founded in 2021 and based in Jacksonville, Florida. The company builds and repairs wood, vinyl, aluminum, ranch and chain link fencing and gates for homes and businesses across Northeast Florida, from Fernandina Beach to Palm Valley. Farence Fencing is insured, holds an A+ rating from the Better Business Bureau and carries a 4.9-star average across 107 Google reviews. More information is available at www.farencefencing.com/.

###

For more information about Farence Fencing, contact the company here:Farence FencingSteve

Farence (904) 832-1261farencefencing@gmail.com1721 Sundale Rd, Jacksonville, FL 32218

Farence Fencing

Founded in 2021, Farence Fencing is a family-owned fence contractor in Jacksonville, FL. Steve, his mother, and his brother run sales, scheduling, and installs themselves. Custom wood is our specialty, alongside vinyl, aluminum, and chain link.

Website: http://www.farencefencing.com/

Email: farencefencing@gmail.com

Phone: (904) 832-1261