

South Jersey Dog Boarding Business Hires New Doggie Daycare Coordinator

July 11, 2016

July 11, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Clif Wyck Farms Kennels, a business in Marlton, NJ, providing dog boarding and other services, has announced that they have hired Tara Stewart as their new Doggie Daycare Coordinator. Tara was the owner and operator of the Ruff House in Marlton. The company been offering such services because they know that dog owners want only the best for their four-legged companions, and this includes high quality doggie daycare.

Lisa Berg, owner of Clif Wyck Farms Kennels, says: "We are excited to add Tara to our growing staff here. We expect her experience and ideas will only enhance what is already the best Doggie Daycare program around!"

The goal of the company is to provide a boarding experience that is relaxing and fun for the dog, thereby ensuring that owners will feel comfortable about leaving their animals there. Each dog is treated with all the love and attention it needs, ensuring that each stay is truly special. Every boarder is treated as a personal pet.

The company is fully licensed to operate and chooses to be inspected annually by the County Health Inspector. Their reputation is such that the Health Department actually uses the company as a best practice example when they train new inspectors. For Clif Wyck Farms Kennels, anyone who works with them has to have true love and compassion for animals, which is one of the reasons why they are so excited to have added Tara to their staff members. More information about the doggie day care can be seen at <http://www.clifwyck.com/doggie-day-care/>.

The company offers both dog and cat boarding, as well as pet grooming and doggie day care services. Tara will be in charge of the day care service in particular, enabling people who work long days to leave their dogs at the kennels in the knowledge that they will be properly looked after during their absence. Daycare includes a continuous program of activities, presented in a way that is both safe and fun for the dogs, so that they can enjoy a happy, healthy life.

Those who want to learn more about the indoor and outdoor doggie daycare program are encouraged to contact the company by telephone, email, or through their website. Furthermore, people are welcome to come visit any time. No appointment is necessary.
