Mount Pleasant Counselling Centre, located in Western Australia, has announced the completion of their newly designed website. The company also announced that they have moved to their new premises, located at Ogilvie Road in Mount Pleasant.

"We've been making many changes," says Eliza Hatton with Mount Pleasant Counselling Centre. "And they are all going to help our staff to better assist those who visit us."

The counselling centre, with website at mountpleasantcounsellingcentre.com.au, offers a range of sessions and treatments for a number of issues including self-esteem, anxiety, panic attacks, stress, relationship issues, and parenting advice. Hatton states that the new website provides information on each of these topics.

"We've included a lot of specific guidance and general information on the new site," Hatton says. "We hope that visitors to the website will find it all very useful, and our overall design is easy to navigate."

The centre offers same sex relationship counselling as well as treatment for school issues and bullying, self-harming behaviour, and family separation issues. In addition, they provide single expert witness assessment and reporting. Hatton states that they offer treatment or assistance for virtually all disorders and issues that patients in the area may be facing, and urges those who are having such problems to contact someone in the office as soon as possible to schedule a consultation.

On the newly published site, visitors can read more about various behaviours and issues such as post-traumatic stress disorder and other psychological issues, as well as various treatment options that are offered at the centre's new location. Staff members state that the office provides a calming atmosphere that assists clients with finding solutions to their troubles.

The company's new site offers contact information that enables visitors to schedule an appointment as well as get information on where and how to find the counselling centre's office. Online appointment booking is also available, as are multiple articles and other relative resources to assist clients through a number of questions and problems. Those interested can visit the website to learn more or have a look at the centre's Google profile, where information about the centre's specialties can also be found.
