Shoulder Dolly, a business in Boulder, CO, has announced that the ShoulderDolly, a device that enables people to carry heavy objects safely and with ease, is now available in more retail stores than ever before. The company developed these moving straps because lifting heavy objects is one of the main causes of sprained muscles. As can be seen on <https://www.shoulderdolly.com>, these straps are useful during those times when people need to lift bulky and heavy objects, such as furniture and appliances.

Sasha Ladendorff from Shoulder Dolly says: "This has been a great year for our ShoulderDolly and we continue to penetrate the moving and material handling market, supplying a premium product for moving heavy, bulky items for a great price. If your local hardware store does not carry us yet, please make sure to ask for our product and have them stock it."

The ShoulderDolly can now be purchased from Lowes, Tractor Supply, Ace Hardware, True Value, Bomgaars, Rural King, and Blains. The Shoulder Dolly straps are essentially designed to fit underneath a heavy object, and then around the shoulders of two people. This means there is no longer any need to bend over and carry heavy objects using hands, or even the tips of fingers. Rather, the hands remain free enabling people to keep the object steady as they move it.

Those who have tried the product have been incredibly happy with what it can achieve. In fact, one customer has shown an image of himself and a friend lifting a 600lb dumpster using the straps. Furthermore, people frequently contact the company from international locations, including Australia, about how they can get their hands on the straps.

"Unfortunately, we don't yet supply to hardware stores abroad," adds Sasha Ladendorff. "However, some of the companies we supply to do have an international presence. And, if a hardware store abroad would contact us, we would certainly consider it. Do make sure you ask your hardware store to stock us, therefore, regardless of where you are."

Lowes was one of the first major hardware stores to stock to the ShoulderDolly. They are a very popular store that operates across the country, as well as in some locations across Europe. Shoulder Dolly is happy to continue this partnership for many more years.
