A Wing Visuals is a brand new video production company based out of Denver, CO. The team caters to local businesses within their community in order to supply much needed video services for community events and other functions. The videos provided by the team are produced using the best technology available, and then edited and tweaked based on customizable packages and customer requirements. A spokesperson for A Wing Visuals says, "The more hours in the edit lab will cause higher production value. It's your choice. Based on your custom package, you will get at least two revisions. If you want sections slow-mode, speed up, or a color correction, it won't be an issue."

The video production company describes their services as being creatively engaging, having the ability to pinpoint emotion, and being beneficial to the fostering of relationships. They have already worked with such well-known companies as Big Brothers Big Sisters of America, United Way, St. Cloud State University, Whitney Center, and others.

The team members at A Wing Visuals have been highly candid in their passion for videography, going so far as to upload and share some of their favorite works directly from the business' official website. Here, potential clients can take a look at the type of videos A Wing Visuals brings to the table before deciding whether or not the company's visual style is right for them. A company spokesperson describes the early process as follows: "A Wing Visuals walks you through the beginning stages of discovery, uncovering what your visions, goals and message will portray to your audience. Once we understand and connect with your business, we work on determining how people will see the film. (YouTube, Google, broadcast, ad, etc.) And execute."

Videos produced by the company can be promotional, event driven, or personal depending on the client. For more information on A Wing Visuals, past work, company values, and specific data on customizable packages, the company invites interested individuals and businesses to visit them online.
