BlackGermanShepherd is a new blog dedicated to this rather large breed of dog. The blog's owner and author, based in Derry, New Hampshire, says that she feels that people need to appreciate what a loyal and obedient breed of dog the German Shepherd is.

"They're just the best dog breed overall," says Alice T. Scott, owner of the new blog. "I felt that it was time to bring attention to them, to have people see just how beautiful, protective, and overall wonderful they really are."

The site's most recent post offers advice to German Shepherd owners to help properly care for the breed. Seen at <http://blackgermanshepherd.co>, the post offers insights into how this breed can be properly trained and lets dog owners know things that they should keep in mind for this and any other dog breed.

"Basically, you have to treat a dog as you would a child. You have to prep your house, and ensure that it is safe at all times," says Scott. "Our goal is to give you information that you need to help you better protect your protector."

Scott states that the breed itself is among the most loyal of all dog breeds, and that they should be properly cared for, as any animal should, to ensure their complete safety. She states that keeping things out of reach, ensuring that the dog is never left out alone, and feeding the right foods can go a long way in helping the pet to grow and live a long healthy life.

Scott says that, unfortunately, many are not quite ready for the responsibility of owning this breed, which is likely why there are a number of German Shepherd adoption agencies around the nation. Some agencies focus solely on rescuing and adopting pups and grown dogs from this breed that have been abused or otherwise neglected. Scott says that if owners took a bit more time in learning about the breed before choosing it, there might be fewer of these agencies needed.
