Nail polishes contain up to three toxic chemicals, which are dibutyl phthalate (DBP), toluene, and formaldehyde. Each of these chemicals does have a role to play in nail varnish, but this does not make them any less dangerous. Care Me, a company in Norcross, GA, believes that people should not have to choose between beauty and health. As a result, they have released their Care Me Electronic Manicure Kit that allows the user to have naturally shiny nails without resorting to nail polish. The home manicure and pedicure kit is already proving to be popular.

A representative from Care Me says: "Each of the chemicals found in some nail polishes can have devastating effects. DBP, for instance, can damage hormone production in a fetus, toluene has been linked to reproductive problems, and formaldehyde is a carcinogen. What worries us even more is that there are some manufacturers that claim these chemicals aren't included in their products, when in fact they are. Luckily, with our electronic manicure kit, people can finally have beautiful nails without having to use nail varnish that puts their health in jeopardy."

The new home mani pedi kit is used to file, buff, and polish, leaving a glistening finish without causing any harm. It is a true chemical-free alternative to nail polish. The new product comes with five interchangeable attachments, a filing head, two buffing heads, and two polishing heads. It is a unique device created for soothing and shining nails. It gently buffs away ridges and discoloration, while instantly adding shine to nails. Many people have even taken the kit with them when they travel.

"Our set delivers a professional looking manicure, in the comfort of your own home," adds the Care Me representative. "Results can last as long as three days, after which you simply repeat the process. The shine is 300% brighter than bare nails, so you don't need nail polish anymore."

For Care Me, the goal is to make sure people can have beautiful nails without placing themselves or their unborn children in any danger. The set comes in an easy to use travel pouch, so it can be take along on a journey as well, allowing people to safely achieve salon style manicure and pedicure results at all times.
