In a statement to news rooms the other day, the CEO of the corporation reiterated that "serving our customer needs in a timely and reliable manner remains to be the core of our business. Our clients are valuable to us, and we spare no effort or resource in ensuring that they are well taken care of whenever they need our services. The reason why we are expanding our reach and opening up these offices. It will allow us to be closer to them."

The company seems to be on a strong campaign to reel in more customers and drivers and lock them in. They just recently launched a new and revamped website whose main aim was to allow its stakeholders to communicate with the company in real time. This new attempt to open up these satellite offices goes to show that positive Status Transportation reviews has made the organization to be more serious about maintaining the customer relationships that it has built over the years.

"There is nothing more frustrating to a customer than trying to reach a service provider who is unreachable. As a company, we very well understand this, and this is why we are sparing no effort or resource in ensuring that our customers can reach us whenever and from wherever they want to. We are focused on making it better by different means like launching mobile app, opening up new satellite office, centralised customer care centre, online chat support, etc." Erik explained to the news rooms.

Known for its unique business model, Status Transportation, has managed to build a strong reputation among the owner operators of trucks. Getting into profitable partnerships with these owners allow them to drive their trucks with a win-win business proposition. The new move to get closer to their customers and drivers will surely open a door that will take the company to great heights.
