Orlando, Florida based Foxbrim has announced the release of a new product designed to provide safe and effective facial cleaning. The new exfoliating face scrub is cruelty free and contains no harmful or dangerous microbeads. Thus, the company points out that it is safe for the face as well as the environment.

Luann Koerper with Foxbrim says, "Our new scrub allows you to remain worry free ahead of the imposition of the ban on microbeads. The tea scrub includes exfoliators made with biodegradable jojoba seeds, which are much safer for your skin and for the environment."

Foxbrim's Exfoliating Tea Face Scrub contains a number of healthy ingredients according to Koerper, such as aloe vera, pumice, kukui nut oil, coffee extract, and organic green and white teas. The company states that they strive to provide only those products that are safe and healthy and offer the most benefit to their customers. Koerper says that this new product fits in with that vision perfectly.

"Many people don't realize that the products they use to cleanse their skin are harmful," Koerper says. "We just want to get the word out about our healthy line of cleansers and ensure that you aren't using something that could ultimately cause damage to your skin now or in a few years from now."

Foxbrim's collection of cleansers includes a number of scrubs and soaps, and the company offers a collection of anti-aging creams and general skin lotions as well. They state that adding this new green tea infused facial scrub fits in well with their general product line because it is natural and does not contain microbeads that can be harmful and cause skin irritation. Koerper says that those who have experienced skin irritations in the past with scrubs will likely be able to use this new scrub as it contains ingredients that are designed to promote healthier skin and those that do not typically cause irritation or reactions.

Those interested in learning more about the new scrub or in seeing any of the company's many products can visit Foxbrim's website where the complete collection can be found.
