May 26, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

J & T Professional Auto Detailing has announced that it is now offering a number of ways to preserve a vehicle's exterior. Company representative Jeff explained that maintaining the car's original condition is much more important than many car owners may realize. Not only does auto detailing protect and preserve a car's original paint, it can prove to be a valuable investment in keeping its market value up.

He added that by simply making it a routine to apply a wax coat or a paint sealant, the owner will be able to preserve the original exterior and help to avoid an expensive paint job in the future. Since most people do not realize that the vehicle's factory paint job is often of a better quality than what may be offered by a local, automobile painter, it should be of primary interest for a vehicle owner to maintain the original look of the car for as long as possible.

Jeff pointed out that if car owners have any intention of selling their cars in the future, regular auto detailing is one way to help to improve a car's resale value, allowing for a higher sale price when the time comes. Part of the reason for this is that the image of a car that is sparkling clean gives the buyer confidence that the vehicle has been taken care of and kept in excellent condition, both inside and out. It also gives the owner a boost of confidence as well.

It's important to understand that detailing a car is more than making sure it is cleaned thoroughly. Not only does it keep the car looking new, it can preserve the original image of the vehicle. One of the ways this can be done is with auto paint correction. The Car Guru explained:

"The process of restoring and rejuvenating the paintwork of a vehicle, mostly through the elimination of surface imperfections, that dull, oxidize, or haze the surface by reflecting light off in various directions."

By using auto paint correction, a vehicle owner can remove any of those imperfections that could be the result of a number of things, including accidents, weather damage, or just plain old age. These flaws could result in diminishing the overall natural finish of the car's exterior. However, Jeff pointed out that there is a big difference in removing imperfections to the car's exterior rather than covering them up, which is what many detailers may actually be doing.

Whether a car is in need of detailing or paint correction, having a variety of options for a car owner to choose from is important. While most people focus on keeping a car's engine running well, he feels that keeping the exterior looking good is equally important. The new line of options offered by J&T's auto detailing can prove to be a way for a car owner to keep up the value of his investment over the life of the car. It will ensure that the car has the maximum amount of protection and can be preserved for as long as possible.
