

Tropical Window Coverings Releases New Window Treatment Review

September 19, 2016

September 19, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

From their base in Cambridge, Massachusetts, Tropical Window Coverings offers reviews of various curtains and other window treatments via their website. The site has recently announced a new review on the Heritage Lace Seascape drop valance that is now available for viewing. Katy K. Conyers, reviewer for the site, says, "Our goal here is to provide honest and unbiased information about various window treatments to help our readers make informed decisions when decorating their homes."

The site's recently published review centers on a lace window treatment. The valance features delicate lace, which Conyers states has been making a comeback in home decorating. She explains that the valance is made of white lace, which means that it will match any decor.

"Color choices are often difficult, particularly when it comes to window treatments," Conyers says. "You've already got your bedding or living room furniture, and while you want curtains or valances that are going to match, you want them to be seen as well. It can be difficult to create a contrast while still keeping with your color scheme."

Conyers says that white is a good color for window treatments because it's a neutral color that not only matches every other color palate, but also helps to let in natural light which can make rooms seem larger than they actually are.

The particular white lace window treatment mentioned in the latest review is a nautical themed valance with a seascape design, and Conyers says that it's made in the United States, and that it allows for privacy while still letting in some natural light. The review states that the valance is wrinkle resistant and that the fabric is a high quality.

The site provides regular reviews of valances, curtains, and drapes so that readers can stay updated on the latest window treatment designs, and judge whether or not a particular treatment is best for their specific window covering needs.
