Auto Immune Disorder Info is a new website that focuses on autoimmune disorders, offering information about various diseases and resources for those who have them. The site outlines what could qualify as such a disorder and explains the disorder in layman's terms so those without medical backgrounds can fully understand it.

"Our goal is to educate people and offer them resources and information that could help them to deal with autoimmunity," says Gregory J. Sherburne with Auto Immune Disorder Info.

The site indicates that one out of every five people in the United States alone have some sort of autoimmune disease, and lists the various diseases that fall under this umbrella. Vitiligo, for instance, is an autoimmune disorder that only affects the color of the skin, but there are life-threatening diseases that are also considered autoimmune disorders.

The website is designed to offer this information, and goes into detail about the various diseases related to autoimmunity in humans as well as dogs, which can be seen at <http://www.autoimmunedisorderinfo.com/diseases-in-dogs/>.

"There are so many diseases that are classified as autoimmune disorders," says Sherburne. "Many people may have a disorder of their immune system and not even know it. Our goal is to help them to know what questions to ask their doctors and generally how to live with these various diseases."

The site specifically lists information about the Paleo diet which has been shown to be very effective in helping to calm the symptoms of autoimmunity. It states that this particular diet is becoming more and more popular as the number of people diagnosed with autoimmunity are growing daily. This diet contains foods that are healthier than the usual processed foods, helping to boost the immune system and relieve a number of the symptoms associated with immune system diseases.

More about autoimmunity and the diseases that it can cause can be seen on the new website at
