September 26, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

The International Association of U.S. Government Contractors (www.IAUSGC.org) announces a new federal government certification program for veterans to enable them capture federal government contracts with agencies like the VA Hospital System.

IA U.S. GC has announced today a new 6 month FEDVICTORY Contracting Program to help small veteran owned businesses to launch into the federal government. "Veterans made a commitment to our country, and IAUSGC is committed to helping veteran small business owners get their fair share of the $500 billion federal marketplace," said Chip Ellis FEDVICTORY Contracting Program.

The FEDVICTORY Contracting Program will seriously grow a veteran owned small business. 1. IAUSGC will introduce a veteran business owner directly to federal decision makers at the VA Hospital System ? the largest hospital system in the world ? who go out of their way to award contracts to veterans. 2. The veteran small business owner will receive three-months advanced mentoring from super-federal government contractor Kristy Nevils. Ms. Nevils recently sold her service disabled veteran company that she owned for 10 years. She will guide the veteran small business owner through the secrets that she is used to capture millions of dollars in federal contracts plus how to turn small contracts into big money. 3. The veteran small business owner will learn everything they need to know (the entire process) to make a fast and profitable entry into the Federal Government marketplace.

Chip Ellis, FEDVICTORY Contracting System explains, "Perhaps as a veteran small business doesn't feel ready to become a prime contractor for federal government contracts. After completing this Program, the veteran small business owner will be certified to capture all the $5,000 to $25,000 federal contracts they can handle." Since 2008, the International Association of U.S. Government Contractors has coached over 1,500 small businesses successfully launch into the federal government marketplace.

Chip Ellis believes that small business owners must have professional coaching to learn how to properly market their products and services to the federal government and now the FEDVICTORY Contracting Program has a special program just for veteran-owned small businesses. Chip Ellis explains, "It's all about bringing the skills and resources like this seminar into a veteran owned small business so they can do it themselves and not have to rely on expensive government consultants." Those who own a small veteran-owned business and would like to make serious money with federal government contracts and need help exploring if the federal contracting is the right fit for their business, then the FEDVICTORY Contracting Program presented by the International Association of U.S. Government Contractors may be a good option.
