Milton Personal Injury Attorney Releases New Information On Texting And Driving

September 29, 2016

September 29, 2016 -
Gross & Schuster P.A. of Milton, Florida, has recently released new information regarding Florida's texting and driving laws and how those laws can help to prevent accidents. The law firm specializes in personal injury cases, including those caused by drunk or texting drivers.

"It's become quite an epidemic," says Terence Gross with the law firm. "People are being injured and even killed regularly because drivers are not following laws regarding texting while driving."

The Milton law firm states that in Florida, a law has made it illegal to text while driving. Those found doing so could face court fines and even jail time. Gross says that unfortunately, making something illegal does not eliminate it, and some drivers still insist on texting behind the wheel, resulting into vehicular accidents and injuries on a near daily basis.

"People are being hurt and hurt badly," the Milton attorney says. "Our job is to help you to recoup your losses if you are injured due to someone breaking this law."

Gross says that anyone having been injured in a texting and driving accident should contact the firm immediately to learn what actions can be taken. He states that many individuals know that texting and driving is not safe, but not all of them understand that it is actually against the law. They view their accident as just that, an accident, and unfortunately never seek compensation for the injuries caused by another driver.

Gross states that the law firm has seen many injuries from distracted driver accidents including spinal cord and back injuries, broken bones, and even brain or other major organ injuries that cause life changing damage to victims. He says that victims of these accidents are often not able to return to work afterward, which makes paying for medical expenses and daily living costs nearly impossible.

The Milton lawyers offer a free consultation with attorneys who are experienced in all forms of personal injury law, including distracted driving laws. The firm assists victims with seeking compensation for medical bills and lost wages, as well as physical and emotional pain and suffering. More about this and other personal injury topics can be seen on their website.
