September 29, 2016 -
Gross & Schuster P.A. of Crestview, Florida, has recently announced that they are providing potential clients with a free case evaluation to determine whether or not they have a valid claim. The Crestview lawyers are willing to represent clients on a number of personal injury cases, including injuries sustained on private and public properties.

In meeting their clients' needs, the firm states that they will consult with individuals who are considering a personal injury claim. Terence Gross with the firm states that there are many individuals who seem to be confused about what constitutes personal injury and liability.

"We talk with so many people who think they don't have any basis for a case when in actuality, they are completely right to seek compensation for their injuries," says Gross. "We want to help even the playing field for victims of personal injury, and ensure that they understand their rights to be heard."

Gross says that those who are looking for a personal injury attorney Crestview residents can depend on can contact the firm to schedule a consultation. He states that during the initial consultation, the attorney can go over details of the claim with the individual and help determine if there is valid evidence to pursue a court case.

"We offer consultations on a number of personal injury claims, including those against homeowners and corporations for neglect that has caused injury," Gross says.

The attorney states that there are a number of consumers injured every year resulting from home or business owner neglect. He says that common cases include icy steps that cause falls or other similar instances where an individual may be hurt due to something on the premises not being completely safe.

The accident lawyer Crestview residents can go to, explains that all property owners are required and responsible for maintaining their premises and keeping them safe, and that those who are injured due to neglect should understand their rights to compensation.

The law firm urges anyone who has been injured as a result of property owner neglect to contact them to schedule a consultation to go over details of the possible claim. More about this and other personal injury topics can be seen on the law firm's official website.
