October 25, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Lisa Swanson, owner and operator of Dharma Acupuncture, has announced the opening of a new clinic that will provide acupuncture in Grass Valley, California. Swanson states that the new location is now open and offers the same services that were offered at her original clinic location.

The original Dharma Acupuncture clinic was opened in Scottsdale, Arizona, and was operated successfully for several years. However, Swanson, a native Californian, has longed to return to a location near her birth home in the San Francisco Bay Area.

"When my husband took me to visit Grass Valley and Nevada City last year, I just fell in love with the charm of the cities, and the surrounding area. I sincerely appreciate living in and serving such a very special community," Swanson says.

The new clinic is in the historic downtown area on Mill St. At the clinic, Swanson and her staff offer acupuncture services for the entire family, including expecting parents. Given her extensive training and experience, the acupuncturist cares for all ages and conditions from pre-birth to newborn babies to geriatric patients.

Being located within downtown Grass Valley was Swanson's main objective when selecting the location. She states, "Being part of the downtown commerce and retail area provides a vibrancy and community feel to the practice while making it easily accessible with its convenient central location."

Prior to launching Dharma Acupuncture in the Scottsdale, Arizona location, Swanson operated other acupuncture clinics in the California cities of Solana Beach and Oakland. While traveling extensively in South America, she practiced acupuncture and taught yoga. She states that her years of experience help her to provide her clients with the very best in services, catered to each individual and his or her specific needs.

The clinic in Grass Valley is now accepting appointments from clients. Swanson says that clients in need of services can call during normal business hours and speak to a staff member who can schedule their visit. Those interested in learning more about Dharma Acupuncture and the acupuncture services they offer can visit them at their new clinic location or on their official website.
