November 14, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

A question that is probably in the minds of many people is what Donald Trump's victory in the US presidential elections will lead to. Many are optimistic and many are pessimistic. According to Dr. Linjie Chou Zanadu, a non-politician winning the presidential election for the first time in decades means a big shift in American and world history. Liberals around the world consider this as their defeat while many of the global agenda may fail miserably according to their lenses.

Dr. Linjie Chou Zanadu, the former secretary of world cultural diversity organization, who is now serving as the advisor to the International Civil Defense Organization, however, sees this as indeed an opportunity for the entire world. He believes the course of the world geo-political make up will be strongly shifted to a new arrangement. He believes that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) will lose its strategic position and that this will give China and Russia a better position in the Eurasia land mass.

"On the other hand," Dr. Zanadu says, "The strengthened US-Russian relation may put China alone on the cold corner because of the personal enigma between Donald Trump and Vladimir Putin, which no Chinese leaders can match up to."

Dr. Zanadu states that like attracts like and this may also bring a negative impact on China-Russia relations. A restored Russian-American relationship will undermine the Chinese global influence. Trump's administration will also indirectly influence the European Union's position and give an extra lift to Brexit.

"Trump's victory also will lead to the failure of the traditional structure of new world order project," Dr. Zanadu states. "Which will create certain anger among the liberals and globalists. The traditional political elites are now starting to choose their sides."

Dr. Zanadu advises that this may eventually lead to more struggles among the different groups and says that hopefully Trump won't end up as John F. Kennedy did. He says the world will just have to watch and wait.

Dr. Linjie Chou Zanadu is a public relations specialist and analyst. He provides political advisory services and PR strategies through his website at www.baronofxanadu.com. Sir Linjie was bestowed the title Honourable Kentucky Colonel in 2011 and was recognized by US President Barack Obama in 2016 for his effort in bridging cultures. President Obama also bestowed upon him the Lifetime Achievement Award of the White House.
