According to a recent article by the American Heart Association (AHA), children, including teenagers and even babies, can suffer from hypertension, also called high blood pressure. The article recommends yearly blood pressure measurements to prevent or limit the effects of the disease.

The article also notes that several risk factors can lead to high blood pressure in children, including heart and kidney diseases and some types of medications. Other contributing factors pointed out by the AHA as causing hypertension in children include obesity and a family history of the disease. As a result of its ability to affect anyone at any time, a suitable blood pressure monitor is required to test blood pressure levels.

The new DigiPulse, a cuff wrist monitor by Just Brill, is designed for blood pressure monitoring in both children and adults. The product measures systolic and diastolic pressure, as well as pulse rates, and comes with a range of features to help make the blood pressure measuring process fast and easy. These include a large digital LCD screen with large font, an adjustable cuff for different wrist sizes, and a low-noise pump which inflates the strap comfortably around the wrist.

Currently available on Amazon.com, the DigiPulse blood pressure monitor is considered to be among the most accurate and easy to use devices in its class. Additionally, it has unique features, such as time-stamped memory recall for up to 60 readings and automatic shutdown to preserve battery life. Since its launch on Amazon.com, hundreds of shoppers have reviewed the product, with many praising its accuracy and effectiveness in monitoring the blood pressures of both children and adults.

?I have high blood pressure and it is important to monitor your pressure, when you are not going to the doctor. This cuff works for all body types. I recommend it for better health,? said Evelyn L. Gresham, a verified Amazon reviewer.

With one in three Americans estimated to be suffering from high blood pressure, a high quality blood pressure monitor, such as the DigiPulse is recommended for children and adults. The product comes with easy to read instructions, as well as a lifetime guarantee.
