Kent Whitaker, a culinary writer, cookbook author and former winner of the Emeril Live Food Network Barbeque contest recently featured a recipe he created, "Grace Jamaican Jerk Pineapple Chicken Kabobs" on his popular food blog, The Deck Chef.

Whitaker created his own unique recipe "Grace Jamaican Jerk Pineapple Chicken Kabobs" using the Grace jerk seasoning. The blog explained how most brands of jerk seasoning available on the market poorly mimics the real flavor of Jamaican jerk seasoning, but Grace Jamaican Jerk Seasoning is a cut above the rest as it boasts authenticity in flavor. It also explained what the term "seasoning" means which most people think of as dried spices or rubs. The blog also featured the two flavors of Grace Jerk Seasoning - the mild and the hot, and as per the author's observation the ingredients listed on the side are simple and no chemicals were added.

"One note about Grace Jamaican Jerk Seasoning - it's the real stuff! If you use it by itself then be prepared for some serious heat,? says Whitaker.

Since it was written, the article has been shared on different social medias like Facebook, Twitter, and Pinterest. Kent takes the reader through step by step on how to make this delicious recipe.

?The fact that Kent was a winner of Emeril Live Barbeque contest, shows that he really knows his barbeque and to create a recipe with our jerk seasoning is awesome! We are honored,? said Deidre, a company representative.

Grace Jamaican Jerk Seasoning is one of several sauces, seasonings and condiments which have been featured on several food blogs, especially since its launch on Amazon. It is authentically made in Jamaica using locally-grown herbs and spices, which comes in mild or hot, allowing consumers to choose the level of spiciness of their dishes. It's availability on Amazon's Marketplace allowed Jamaicans and non-Jamaicans living abroad to be able to create dishes with the same authentic taste of Jamaican recipes.

Grace Jamaican Jerk Seasoning is currently available on Amazon with purchasing options of 1 bottle, 4 bottles of 12 bottles. In addition, as a bonus all purchases come with a digitally delivered recipe book full of jerk recipes.
