

Escape Harassment Helps People Find Contract Loophole

December 02, 2016

December 02, 2016 -
Escape Harassment, an organization in Lewes, DE, is dedicated to providing people with advice, information, and guidance to resolve problems with tickets, courts, and the IRS. Made up of a team of volunteer educators and researchers, Escape Harassment does not include the provision or sale of legal advice. Rather, they provide educational resources to ensure people can identify a contract loophole if there is one.

David deRiemer from Escape Harassment says: "The American people think they live in a Constitutional Republic. What actually exists today is "rule by corporations". They trick people into contract voluntary registration, then demand or enforce compliance with terms of the Contract Penalty-Clause. We created this website to expose the fraud and coercion (that the research has revealed), and provide the important information."

The organization is set up by former private business owners who were tired of not being able to be truly profitable because of the various taxes and debts they had to pay. They started to hold weekly research meetings, looking into various forms of contract infringement, and what their own constitutional rights were. In so doing, they created various educational resources to help others fight their way out of the positions they were in before.

Those who have used the information provided by Escape Harassment have been very positive about the help they received. "Mr. Don H. (from Long Island, New York) and his wife had seven (7) years of ongoing correspondence from several different IRS offices, and notices of liens and levies, and threats to "sell their home", if they did not pay. They contacted the research people (& the 'Howard Griswold Research Group'), and activated "Strategy #1" as instructed. The wife could not believe that it could be so easy to "un-volunteer" from the IRS. The "Strategy #1" process had worked 100 per cent. Their home was "free and clear" from all and any IRS."

Those who are currently facing tax infringement difficulties are encouraged to contact Escape Harassment as soon as possible. They point out that the information they offer is much less costly than the cost of going to court and solving problems the usual way.
