Carpet Cleaner Staten Island company offers its latest blog post on the topic of health risks posed by wet carpet. The firm provides commercial and residential cleaning 24/7.

Staten Island NY: Carpet Cleaner Staten Island is pleased to announce the release of its latest blog post, titled "Wet Carpet Risks For Health". Water damage to a home or business can be problematic, especially where carpets and rugs are concerned. Even with the solution of a thorough cleaning, wet carpets can pose several health risks. A major problem in a wet carpet or rug is the development of mold and mildew. There are additional health issues which can occur over the long term, unless a cleaning involves action against mold organisms.

Carpet Cleaner Staten Island professionals have posted a recent blog entry about some of the health risks which can happen when wet carpet is not addressed. Some of the problems include mildew, allergies, and destruction of the fibers in the carpet, as well as the backing. When the carpet is not appropriately dried, it can become a breeding ground for molds and mildew. This results in the likelihood of vulnerability to allergies.

Some of the typical symptoms which can occur when the indoor environment of the structure is overwhelmed by fungus include frequent sneezing, congested nose, throat and lungs and watery eyes. Serious respiratory difficulties, such as asthma and tuberculosis, as well as shortness of breath. Mold spores may cause a migraine, dementia, fatigue and mood swings. Skin allergies is another symptom.

The blog articles presents several steps to prevent the development of mold spores due to wet carpeting. The first step is to eliminate as much of the water content as possible quickly. Dry vacuums and fans will help to speed the process. A dehumidifier can dry the complete room or area. Steam cleaning of the floors and carpets can help to sanitize the area. Replacing the padding beneath the carpet is an excellent way to prevent mildew. The services of a professional cleaning team is recommended for extensive moisture in the structure. They have the knowledge and tools to correct the problems.
