GrowUpSmart in London, England, has announced new toys that are available on their web shop. The company states that they are now offering various toys that promote and develop gross and fine motor skills in children. Martin Reinhold, a spokesperson for GrowUpSmart, says, "Our goal is to provide parents and those who work professionally with children with the tools that they need to further development in children. We have a nice new collection of toys that help children develop their much needed motor skills, and they are fun toys for children as well."

Among the toys in the company's new line is a set of Yobee Verse Cards. The cards teach yoga exercises by offering an image of the exercise on the front and a verse to the exercise in a rhyme on the back. Reinhold states that the cards are highly educational and help to teach exercises as well as promote a combination of language and movement to children.

"Aside from the obvious movement that children are encouraged to perform," Reinhold says, "the children also work on their memory and action planning skills through the movement sequences."

Another toy in the new collection is the spinning jewels game, which comes in a couple of different colors. The game helps children to learn color mixture along with a number of physical laws such as rotation and visual perception. The colorful spinning tops hold sparkling jewel stones, which the company states are ideal for smaller children because they are easy to handle. Children will enjoy the interplay of colors while learning valuable motor skills.

GrowUpSmart states that they provide only the highest quality of toys that show true educational potential for children. The company states that they do not offer big brand name licensed toys or otherwise "must have" toys that are advertised on television, but instead provide toys that have been tested and proven as highly educational.

Parents and child professionals interested in learning more about the new line of toys that the company offers can do so on their official website, where additional educational toy collections can also be found including a new line that contains a number of empathy dolls.
