Chicago, Illinois based Home Inspection Geeks Inc. is proud to announce that they have been named an "Elite Service Professional" by Home Advisor. The home inspection company, which provides a variety of services including radon inspection in Chicago, has indicated how pleased they were about the award.

"We are very honored to be awarded such a title, especially after just joining the Home Advisor network earlier this year. While obtaining awards is not one of our priorities, receiving honors such as this one definitely reaffirms that we are on the right track to achieving our mission of delivering peace of mind, one home at a time. Thank you to all our clients that helped us achieve this honor," says Timothy Wojnar from Home Inspection Geeks.

The home inspection Chicago company offers inspections for pre-mortgage as well as pre-warranty expirations, new constructions, radon, and drone roof inspections. The company states that their home inspection is a three hour inspection that is performed in full accordance with InterNACHI's Standards of Practice. The Standards of Practice define home inspections as visual examinations that are designed to identify defects in the home from the foundation to the roof.

Wojnar states that once an inspection has been completed, the company provides a full color online report that includes more than 100 images as well as an HD video of the inspection. He says that these extras that most inspection companies in the area do not offer, have helped to make the company an elite provider according to Home Advisor.

The owner of Home Inspection Geeks worked for more than five years as a mechanical engineer and possesses a master's degree in energy engineering. He is licensed in the state of Illinois for inspections and certified by InterNACHI, the International Association of Certified Home Inspectors. In addition to the wealth of experience and certifications, the company is giving back to the community by donating five percent of its proceeds to Habitat for Humanity in Chicago.

The home inspector Chicago residents can rely on also participates in InterNachi's Buy Back program where the organization buys back homes for the price customers pay for them if something is missed during the inspection and the homeowner no longer wishes to own the home. More on this and other programs that the company participates in can be seen on their official website.
