The new website MyHappyPuppy.Info offers a growing list of resources to help new dog owners with puppy and dog training challenges. Now, it also offers a newly released free Video Course with tips on solving the most common behavior problems.

The end of December is an especially important time for information about handling frustrating dog behavior. All too many dogs are given as Christmas gifts. That may be well intended, but the unfortunate result is often that a lot of the dogs are turned in to shelters.

Sometimes, the surprised new owners simply can't cope with the demands of caring for a new puppy or coping with problem behaviors. In fact, they may not have even wanted a dog in the first place. Puppies may be adorable, but there's a difference between watching a cute puppy at play and actually being responsible for keeping a puppy happy and healthy.

It's true, the company says: many children ask Santa for a puppy. But a puppy under the Christmas tree is generally a bad idea. Getting a new puppy - or a new dog - requires thought and planning, and one of the articles on the site provides valuable tips on how to decide on owning a puppy.. and how not to.

The company also offers an article on what belongs into a new puppy starter kit - it can be quite surprising how much is involved. A dog bed, a bowl, and a leash are just the beginning. In addition, there are toys, the right type of food, grooming products, and much more.

In addition, new dogs may not always be on their best behavior. One of the most annoying behaviors in dogs is excessive barking. This is frustrating not just for the owners of the pet but also the neighbors, especially since the barking is usually worst when the dog is left home alone. Advice on how to stop the excess barking is on the site as well.

A lot of the traditional approaches to dog training are actually counter productive - and even cruel, the company says. They add that the tips in the free dog obedience video course will explain why this is the case and provide alternative ways to get the dog to behave. This helps the dog not just fit in better with the family but also happier - since the alternative ways work in combination with the dog's nature.

"After all, they're pack animals," says Kuhn, the creator of MyHappyPuppy.info. They need to be able to follow the leader. But if there is no leader, there's trouble.

To make sure the new puppy is happy, it's important to get information on how to properly care for and train the new puppy. The website provides a growing range of that information, plus links to additional resources, including the free dog obedience video course. It can be found at <http://myhappypuppy.info>.
