Pet Consider offers a series of articles which set out guidelines for pets. Both dogs' and cats' foods are included in the recent blog posts.

Buffalo Grove IL: Pet Consider is pleased to announce that their latest blog post has been released on the topic of foods for pets. The food under discussion is avocados. The blog post discusses the safety of feeding dogs avocados. There are varying opinions about whether or not it is safe for dogs to consume the fruit of the avocado tree. For pet owners who are attempting to provide a more healthy diet for themselves and their pets, avocados are a healthy and delicious choice.

The questionable component in avocados is a chemical called persin. Although it is not good for dogs to consume large amounts of the chemical, it is mostly found in the skin and near the pit. If the peel and the pits are removed, avocado is safe in moderation. The fruit has many qualities which are good for canine companions, including protein, Vitamin A, Vitamin C, B vitamins, potassium and niacin. The food also contains high amounts of healthy fats.

According to the Pet Consider Blog, avocados contain all eight amino acids which are necessary to form a complete protein. This is particularly important for athletic dogs who need extra protein to build and repair muscles and organs. Dogs need a higher level of protein than their human owners, in order to ensure a strong immune system, healthy skin and coat. The level of fats in avocados is another component which contributes to skin, coat and brain health.

The blog contains informational articles regarding several other foods which pet owners may have questions about. These include chocolate, candy, mushrooms and gatorade. Cats also have some foods which are described in additional blog articles. These include candy and almonds. Replacing pet treats which are full of preservatives and other components known for their negative effects with healthy whole foods is a growing pattern of behavior for pet owners.
