Laporte CO: Local Winos and Jackson Gerano are pleased to announce the launch of their latest article and review on the topic of wine fridges. The recent post is written to describe the best wine cooler for a specific budget. There are coolers specified with prices under one hundred dollars, at the low end of this price range as well as mid-range and top-of-the-line appliances. Price is almost always a concern for customers, yet it is important to be aware of the features which cause the appliances to be placed on the "Best" lists.

Long term storage of red or white wine collection or other beverages at the home or apartment is useful for the preservation of the flavor and durability of the beverage. Keeping wines in temperature-controlled wine coolers extends the life of the wine. The features which are included in the reviews range from size of the appliance. Location, price and value as well as others. The consideration of size ranges from a half dozen of fewer bottles to as many as fifty bottles.

The pick by the reviewers of coolers for appliances at a price less than $100 is the IGLOO FRW041 4-Bottle cooler. At this price level, there is unlikely to be frills, yet the named cooler has some features which make it a good pick for small and compact spaces. The appliance has a dual pane glass door which keeps in the cold, as well as adjustable and removable shelves which provide some storage options.

In the mid-range for prices, the 34-Bottle Free-Standing Edgestar is selected by the reviewers. The model is attractive and free standing. It has a reversible door handle so that it swings either direction. Dual zones are available and a locking feature keeps the stock of wines secure. The EdgeStar 36 Bottle is the upper end of the price range. This model can be used as a freestanding or a built-in unit. The unit has slide-out steel and wood trimmed shelving. Digital controls and dual zone, as well as lockable glass French doors, are part of the features.
