January 27, 2017 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Trinity Leads in West Warwick, Rhode Island, states that real estate companies can significantly boost their success rates by using some of the same strategies that were used during the Presidential election. The company points out that this same marketing technology was used heavily in part to help President Trump's election campaign to reach a tipping point and secure his ultimate win.

"Real estate agents and brokers now have the ability engage with hundreds of home owners in their markets," says Mark Casey with Trinity Leads.

Mark Casey states that by using a direct voice message with the sole purpose of having those interested to call back, real estate agents can virtually guarantee that they will be filling their appointment books. He explains that the real estate direct voice message offered by Trinity Leads includes proven split tested scripts that real estate agents can successfully use for their campaigns.

"Realtors have to realize that now is the time to reach success," says Casey. "Right now, there aren't enough properties on the market to satisfy everyone who is looking to buy. It's a seller's market and you have to be willing to grab your share."

Mark Casey points out that more and more consumers are becoming aware of the current market situation, and are looking to find out what their properties may be worth. He states that with increases in the current market of as much as five percent, many homeowners are wondering if it may be time to place their home equity into a bigger, more expensive home, which leaves realtors with the task of selling their current homes and helping them to find another one to purchase. Casey states that this is a real estate agent's dream scenario, but agents have to be able to get leads.

Trinity Leads can assist with getting leads for real estate agents wishing to increase their marketing base and ultimately, their revenue. The company states that they offer a proven method for collecting leads through direct voice messaging, and urges real estate agents who are interested to learn more by visiting them on their official website.
