Blanton Bendall, popular Richmond piano tuner and owner of Southern Piano Service, has just published a new article with advice on how piano owners can find the best piano tuner near their location. This is especially important for new piano owners who are looking for someone to take care of their piano for the first time.

While the exact meaning of "near" can be somewhat flexible, it's a good idea that one's piano tuner does not live too far away, in case a tuning has to be scheduled on short notice.

Says Bendall, "I suggest that they go to Google and search for "Piano Tuner Near Me" to find a good selection of piano tuners who are offering their services nearby." In fact, he provides an easy three-step process to help them figure out which piano tuner would be the best fit.

Since piano tuners do their work at the piano owner's homes, it is important that piano tuner and owner feel comfortable with each other, and Bendall's article helps owners make sure that they will have the kind of rapport and comfort level that would make for a good relationship.

The next step is booking a piano tuner - preferably the one that turned up at the top of the list. Pianos need to be tuned on a regular basis, so scheduling a tuning is an excellent way to meet one's new piano specialist. If the visit is successful, the odds are good that the tuner will turn into the go-to person for any piano tuning and repair needs in the future.

If the visit turns out to be less than ideal, the process can easily be repeated when the next tuning is needed. However, the selection process, if properly followed, is designed to help the piano owner find their ideal tuner at the first try.

Bendall also shares some information about the range of his expertise as well as the locations where he provides his services. He not only tunes and repairs pianos, but also provides highly specialized services including piano restoration, restringing, and more. In addition, he also helps with piano moving and storage.

His clients live in the City of Richmond, the Greater Richmond Area as well as all over Central Virginia, including the adjacent counties, such as Henrico, Chesterfield, Hanover, Louisa, Goochland, New Kent, as well as the surrounding cities, including Ashland, Montpelier, Glen Allen, and many more. He also enjoys taking care of church pianos as well as pianos in schools.
