Wyldlife Pets is a Fort Lauderdale, Florida company that provides natural treats for pets. The company's popular Natural Bully Sticks offer a number of benefits over commercially produced rawhides and other chews, and the company has recently cited a number of reasons why their chews are better than others.

"We just know that all natural is always better," says Colin Campbell, a spokesperson for the company. "You want to take good care of your dog, and so do we, which is why we have developed our Bully Sticks to offer a more natural dog treat that is better for your dog."

Campbell says that commercially produced treats, even those claiming to be all natural, may contain chemicals simply because of how they are produced. He says that mass producing any product has its benefits obviously with regards to how many of that product can be turned out at once. However, he states that having dog treats created in a factory can often have detrimental effects on pets.

"When you think about your pet, about his treats, you think about what's best for his overall health," Campbell says. "You want something that is natural, something that benefits his health in some way, and something that does not contain chemicals and preservatives that could be dangerous to dogs."

Campbell says that the treats for dogs from Wyldlife Pets are all natural, which means that they contain no chemicals, hormones, or antibiotics. He explains that they are beef tendon from 100 percent Angus beef, which is safer for dogs to digest than chemically processed dog chews. In addition, the tendons help to promote healthy cartilage and the chews offer benefits for the teeth and gums as well.

Campbell says that dog owners who want the best for their pets know that chemically produced chews can contain dangerous ingredients. He states that because Bully Sticks are all natural and not mass produced, they offer an obvious health benefit over packages of treats that can be purchased in bulk at most national pet store companies. Pet owners who would like to learn more of the health benefits of Bully Sticks can visit Wyldlife Pets online.
