Adam Pritchard, who is a business coach and mentor based in St. Albans, Herts, UK, has recently announced the official launch of his new business. This business is designed to assist business owners in surmounting a number of challenges.

"I'm an entrepreneur," says Pritchard. "I began by selling t-shirts and graduated to fruit juice before building a business with a retail sales value of more than $25 million. I know business and my goal is to help others to know business as well."

Pritchard's newly launched business website can be seen at <http://www.adampritchard.co.uk>, where a full list of the consultations and services he offers can be seen. He claims that everything he knows about business is firsthand knowledge and was learned the hard way.

"I'm not like other business coaches," Pritchard states. "I know that in order to succeed, you have to put in hard work and that's exactly what I will tell you whether we're chatting with a cup of coffee or I'm counseling you on your next big business venture."

Pritchard states that achieving a retail sales level of more than $25 million in just three years in the soft drink industry while dealing with challenging growth problems and taking on multi-national corporations is a feat that not all business coaches can attest to. He has worked with a number of customers, such as Tesco, Wal-Mart, and many others, which has given him vast knowledge of a variety of industries. He states that it is this knowledge that has led him to the creation and launch of his official coaching and mentoring business for other companies.

Pritchard states that he is a believer of the power of effective marketing and says that the results he has achieved in his lifetime came from a limited budget. He states that this experience gives him an edge that many other consultants do not have and says that he can assist business owners with their marketing strategies no matter what their industry or budget is. Those interested in learning more about Adam Pritchard and his new business venture can visit him on his newly launched website.
