The increase in number of online gamers is hugely influenced by the opinions and inputs of gaming strategy websites, says GA Games, a startup gaming blog website.

According to Joe Bravo, the founder of game-arrange.net, online gaming is currently at its best, with gamers amounting to hundreds of millions from around the world. He credits the huge popularity in gaming to the inputs of startup websites that strategize or help game developers know how they could better their games. Bravo further says that the fact that the gaming industry has become more entertaining and more lucrative to invest in was one reason that inspired him to start his website.

"There is no doubt that strategy websites have helped game developers produce more entertaining games. It is actually inspiring to see that the input in news, articles and forums have made the gaming industry more entertaining. It was one of the reasons why I decided to start blog and make my input by sharing gaming related news," Bravo said.

The huge popularity has its own challenges though, which is why game lovers like Bravo are also calling for more developers and strategists to redefine the industry. Jack Howard for instance, a writer at game-arrange.net says that there is still room for developers to make more entertaining and intriguing games. He also cites an overwhelming number of bots and fake games on the Internet as another reason why game strategists should work harder to make the industry better every day.

"It goes without say that strategy websites have defined the gaming industry as it is today. I actually can't imagine a gaming world where gamers couldn't find help or interact with fellow gamers. However, I think there is still a lot to be done, when it comes to fighting bots and hackers who hide underneath free online games," said Howard.

Bravo now hopes to make his input in the gaming industry by not only sharing news but also by making reviews about strategy games. He also says that his website will advocate for cheaper games, and will partner with other strategy game websites in coming month.
