Pullman WA: Palouse Brand and the Mader Family has been farming in the southeast part of Washington State for five generations. The cleaning plant was added to the operations in 2001. The Palouse Trading location takes raw food products and cleans them into edible food grade products. The farm operation uses sustainable agricultural practices such as Direct Seeding and No-Till practices. These practices have reduced soil erosion, increased soil health and controlled cost. In 2006, the farm became Food Alliance certified.

Palouse Brand has procedures and labeling in place which identify where their products were grown and harvested. This gives customers peace-of-mind about the certification and purity of non-GMO foods. Every step of the process, origination, cleaning and packaging, is under the control of the family owned business. The products can be found in various locations such as local food co-ops, Amazon.com, various restaurants, bakery supply companies, private grocery labels and personal chefs.

Hummus is a popular dip or spread which is based on the garbanzo bean. A variety of different seasonings can be added to appeal to the widest number of consumers.
