The book revolves around the main character's struggle with growing up in a household with a mentally ill mother who never liked him since the day he was born. The author will keep the reader's attention with this page-turning emotional story. The story is set in Hawaii. The island paradise of Oahu becomes a prison for the young narrator, named Rab, and his mother who is lost in her own reality.

Sweeney has wanted to be a writer since the first grade, when he became intrigued with how words could be used to paint unforgettable images. He was heavily influenced by his father and his love of language and literature. He credits Harper Lee, Robert Cormier, James Joyce, Hemmingway and Fitzgerald with his development as a writer. Sweeney is a graduate of Clark University. He has taught English at high school level and internationally.
