Panama City, Fla.- The Disaster Response Team, a leading disaster response team in Panama City, has released information for the community on three habits that could hinder success for establishing value on home content claims.

The DRT team are experts with understanding claims from insurance agencies and policyholders. In order to help people who are in the process of filing home claims the emergency response team has created some best practices to help home owners discover inaccuracies that may affect the value of their home.

The owner of the Disaster Response Team said, "Many of these content claims inaccuracies are preventable, so we just want to inform our community on these oversights. Nobody wants to be underpaid."

The team specializes in processing claims for emergency response in Panama City Beach, FL, and states that going with price estimates is the first error that routinely leads to underpayment. Disaster Response Team of Panama City also advises insurers not to expect policyholder to complete their inventory or to accept their appraisals at face value. Both consistently lead to inaccurate pricing on objects.

?This information can help insurers and policyholders alike and we are all about fair business,? the owner of the Disaster Response Team said.

For years, DRT has been aiding homes and businesses with restoration solutions. The experts at DRT has designed these tips around the insight that a disaster is often inevitable and costly. The Disaster Response Team strives to keep the greater Panama City area educated on preparing for the inevitable since disasters can happen when people least expect it.
