CandE Security offers a website devoted to a variety of self defense products. Blog articles cover additional details about the use and purpose of the products.

Cerulean KY: C and E Security and Edward van Aken are pleased to announce the release of their informational blog on the topic of self defense products. The most recent blog post describes the use of pepper spray. The company sells and provides information about non-lethal self defense products. The focus of the inventory is on stun guns and pepper sprays. All major brands are represented in the inventory. The pepper spray is available in several different distribution modes so that it is convenient to carry at all times.

C&E Security online catalog provides various categories of products which can be used for defense. Some of the products include animal repellent, bear spray and women's defense. The pepper spray is available on key chains and lipstick dispenser tools. Mace, Pepper Shot and Wildfire are the brands that are available. The categories include stun guns and tasers. Stun guns can be manufactured as flashlights, lipsticks and high voltage stun guns. The site also sells tasers.

According to the blog article, pepper spray is a chemical compound which irritates the eyes. They tear up and are temporarily blinded. Originally used by law enforcement, the use of the spray is also used for protection against animal attacks, including dogs and even bears. The spray is non-lethal, but is effective for those who want to use a easily transportable device to provide protection.

Pepper spray has a main ingredient called capsaicin derived from the plant family which includes chili. The strength of the spray available on the market depends on several factors. These include the type of capsaicinoids. There are six different types, each of which causes a different irritation level.

The spray delivery system should be tailored to the user's lifestyle and the likely need for the product. A person who hikes in bear country may require a different delivery method than someone who typically travels on city streets.
