Spring In The Air Announces New Shipment Of Long Stemmed Roses

March 15, 2017

March 15, 2017 -
Miami, Florida based florist Spring In The Air has announced the arrival of a shipment of long stem roses in various colors. The company oversees the production of roses from its gardens that are located in Colombia, South America.

Sergio Cadena with Spring In The Air says, "We have a team of agronomists with more than 35 years of experience, which enables us to provide our customers with the most beautiful and freshest roses in the region."

The company has received numerous awards over the years for its flowers, which have been included in shows around the world. They offer fresh roses delivery to those in Miami as well as across the nation through their website.

"Our membership services deliver the freshest roses whenever you want them delivered," says Cadena. "You can choose a one-time shipment or have a monthly bouquet of long stemmed roses delivered to your door."

Cadena states that customers can choose the dates when they need flowers delivered and have them sent to anyone in the U.S. Customers can sign up and determine when and where roses need to go, choosing their colors and arrangements at the time of sign up to save time. Cadena says that the company offers the biggest blooms and longest stems for their customers and says that their growers are well versed in rose care, trimming the stems to just the right length for optimal beauty and longevity.

The company states that whether a customer needs two dozen roses delivered for a special wedding anniversary or they simply want a one-time arrangement sent as special congratulations, they guarantee that the roses will be blooming and fresh when they are delivered. Their inventory currently consists of many different colors, and Cadena states that customers can see all of the vivid colors that are available by visiting them on their official website.

Since the company has its own flower gardens in South America, Cadena states that they are never without the specific colors that customers desire. Those interested in seeing all of the colors and arrangements that are currently available can visit Spring In The Air online.
